Anthropology and History: Intersections for Global Survival

Programme Event

International Committee of Historical Sciences | 26–30 August 2026 | Leipzig, Germany

DATE	LOCATION
29 Aug 2026, 11:30 - 13:00	House 1 T-1001
THEME	CONFERENCE
G - Future Trends, Challenges, and Opportunities in the Historical Sciences	International Committee of Historical Sciences

Overview

Anthropology is a historical science. It is a product of our biological and social evolution. Human history has been a narrative of increasing connectivity, from scattered and isolated communities to a global network of interaction. Today, we see the survival and well-being of humanity and other lifeforms threatened by climate crisis, competition, and conflict. There is a need for new forms of global consciousness. This does not eliminate other social identities, but it does forefront the need for an over-arching vision to assure the survival of people, their environment, and their heritage. Indeed, the diversity and sharing of regional adaptive traditions are necessary: Strength in diversity but with common, core values. We are five anthropologists and a historian who work across the spectrum of bio-cultural studies to reinforce the need for global understanding and cooperation.

Participants

Convenor

- Barry Rodrigue (Symbiosis International University, founder member of IAGHS)

Commentator

- Radhika Seshan (Savitribai Phule Pune University)

Panelists

- Carlos Londoño Sulkin (University of Regina)
- Theyiesinuo Keditsu (Kohima College)
- Manjari Jonnalagadda (Symbiosis International University)
- S. Madhav Dileep (PlanAdapt Collaborative)

Source: https://cish2026.recentglobe.org/events/anthropology-and-history-intersections-for-global-survival/

Generated: 28/08/2026 18:30